SATURDAY MORNING, JUNE 12, 1858.

CONGRESS PAST AND PRESENT. Those who lived in the days when Clay was Speaker of the House, will read the f.-nowing with no ordinary interest. It a from the Washington correspondent the Boston Courier. We are free to ay "Plato, thou reasonest well:"

"Those who are not accustomed to witness the proceedings of Congress, and who have the proceedings from personal observation, of not the mea-s, from the present House with that body comparing the present House with that body as it existed twenty or thirty years ago, would find it difficult to believe the truth in regard to it. A visitor to the House for the first time, is astounded at the want of dignity and decorum, and the positive disorder and simultaneousness which attracts his attention. The scene which ordinarily presents itself is one of confusion. One-half of the members are out of their seats-walking to and fro; standing in the alleys or in the area in front of the Speaker's desk; gathered in knots here and there, and engaged in conversation, not unfrequently so loud as to vie with a speaker who may be formally addressing the House; and members probably lying and sleeping upon the luxurious sofas and couches which surround the members' seats. Some are sitting listlessly, and with apparent indifference to the proceedings, in their easy chairs, with both their feet, it may be, upon their elegant carved oak desks .-Orbers, among the few comparatively who seem to be aware of the business before the House, are constantly interrupting the speaker who is entitled to the floor; and not unfrequently two or three members will be addressing the Chair at the same time .--What with this and the conversation going on about the hall, in every direction, a pretty good idea of Babel may be formed. Every few minutes the Speaker's hammer is vigorously but vainly plied, for the purpose of restoring order; and ten timesan hour the clear voice of the Speaker is heard above the tumult of tongues, requesting members to resume their seats, and admonishing them that conversation is too loud in the hall, and that he cannot entertain any motion to proceed to business until order is restored. Ten times an hour, however, there is renewed the occasion for this interference of the Speaker. It must be a firm and durable material which withstands the constant and severe application of the Speaker's bammer. During the long term of years in which

Henry Clay was Speaker of the House, he seldom or never used the hammer. Either through his influence as a presiding officer, or a better sense of decorum among the members, dignity and order marked the proceedings of the House at all times. But if ever there were occasion to call to order,and a slight departure from the rules of the House was deemed an occasion-it was done. and effectually done, by a simple tap upon the Speaker's desk with his folder or penknife. If while a member was addressing the House, two others were out of their seats and whispering even in front of the Speaker's desk, Mr. Clay would request the member to suspend his remarks till order was restored. An anecdote related recently by a venerable gentleman and a model legislator, will illustrate the sentiment which pervaded the Honse at that time in regard to the deportment of members while in their seats .--Now, as has been remarked, members are constantly seen with their feet, both feet, upon the tops of their desks, in the most vulgar and ungainly position imaginable. The desks, as is known, are elegant and expensive, being made of oak, richly and elaborately carved. It is mortifying to the spectator, and it would be grating to the feelings of your Messrs. Doe & Hazelton, the manufacturers of these desks, to see the heels of the members of Congress, which, like their heads, are not always of the most delicate structure, in such rough and destructive contact with their beautiful handiwork .--The anecdote alluded to is this-Mr. Vance, a member of the House, was lame; and to relieve himself from pain, he one day raised his foot to the edge of his desk. Mr. Clay, observing his position, sent one of the pages to him to remind him that he was out of order. He looked up, and catching the Speaker's eye, graciously bowed an acknowledgment of the justice of the rebuke, and resumed his customary dignified and decorous position.

At the time referred to no interruptions of members while speaking were allowed .--Now such interruptions are constant, and now are generally and indiscriminately indulged in as sometimes to create the extremest confusion. Then, speaking to the question, even in committee of the whole, was strictly insisted upon, and the Speaker was accustomed to remind members whenever they rambled or deviated from the question in debate. There was of course no occasion for members to call one another to order, as they now do incessantly. That office was then properly discharged by the Speaker .--Now, the latitude and longitude of debate in committee of the whole is unbounded and unmensured by any rules of the House or any laws of propriety. Then, when the House resolved itself into committee of the whole it was customary for the Speaker to go down and take part in the debate. Now, the Speaker retires to his private room, which is fitted up with palatial magnificence for the reception of his friends, and is seen no more till the rising of the committee, which during his absence, scarcely rises to the dignity of a political caucus, much less to that of a town meeting or a debating society.

There are other matters connected with the deliberations of Congress, and with a comparison of the Congressmen new and those thirty years ago, which are worth noticing, but for which there is not room now." C.
